Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in.Excerpt from The Utah Review, Vol. 1: December, 1881 We are cited to the British civil service as a triumphant answer to these objections, but it remains to be Shown that Great Britains admin istrative methods or administration are better than ours, while in politics she has not yet arrived at the point we started from a century ago. Why then should we be asked to take either her administrative or political methods, which are intimately connected in a Democracy, as models There, candidates for the civil service are subjected to a competitive examination, which lasts a few hours, which may examine for everything but real fitness, and which may be crammed for. Here the test is infin itely more searching. A candidate must have so lived as to have a well established and general reputation for fitness or he cannot command the in uence that secures appointment, he cannot pass the scrutiny of the confirming Senate, he cannot execute his official bond in amount and with sureties corresponding to the importance of the office. Broadly it may be said that the issue is between government by universal suffrage and by competitive examination. It is not Great Britain but China that has thoroughly tried the latter. Thousands of years ago China aban doued the experiment of governing by universal suffrage and adopted the other method. The result is a governing class, the members of which know the sacred books by heart, and a people without souls. Judged by this example the system will hardly commend itself to our people. If it is the only panacea fora pure and efficient civil service, it is at least curious that business men have not discovered...
