Dutton. $2.50. 822.3 Mr. Mitchell has taken nothing for granted, except that the acting of Shakespeare has an educational value. He begins at the beginning and tells exactly how to choose the play, how to organize the company, how to plan and carry out rehearsals, how to set the stage for different plays, how to make cheaply and yet effectively the furniture and accessories, how to design and make the costumes, how to manage the lighting, how to do the make-up, and how to provide suitable music. Middleton, George. Masks. 1920. 227p. Holt, $1.60. 812 Here are six one-act plays of modern American life all more or less satiric and all with the same implication as the title play. In Masks we are introduced to the shabby home of a hitherto unsuccessful dramatist at the moment of his first success. While he is musing at his desk over the change in his fortune he is haunted by two of the characters of a former rejected play, which now having been remodeled is making him rich and famous. They are...
