Not illustrated. 1892 edition. Excerpt: . chapter ii. Reluctantly as Wotton had consented to this scheme, the good effects of it were already beginning to be felt. The preparations and preliminary settlements produced a wholesome diversion of his thoughts, so many little outward cares constraining him to calculation and exertion, the unusual bustle of his still house, all contributed to draw him from the dark Trophonius cave of his own imagination into the light and warmth of day. As he rode along through the bright morning to his lawyer, that he might finish, after long loitering, some acts of business relating to his little property, and some acts of beneficence to one or two poor peasants dependent on him, he almost felt as if he were in very deed ceasing to be an alien from the commonwealth of men, as if he too had some duties to perform in his own sphere, barren and humble though it was. The journey itself, though he viewed it with little pleasure, nay in general with a sort of captious regret, was yet a prospect if not a hope, and thus the future, if not filled with inviting forms, was no longer absolutely void. Nay in spite of himself some promise of enjoyment rose faintly over his mind; for the plastic vigour of young fancies which shapes such landscapes in the clouds, though sorely marred in him was not extinct, and where good and evil are both possible, there is no such perverse...
