Excerpt: . . . as the hostile main attack develops. The disintegration of the artillery reserve at Coulmiers was due to the fact that the defensive position selected was too extensive to be held by the weak infantry force available. But even in this case, it would have been better to hold the artillery reserve intact. In favor of assigning all the artillery to the divisions (Russia, Austria, Germany), it may be urged, --1. That, nowadays, war is not carried on by means of army corps acting independently, but by armies operating abreast of each other; 2. That such assignment facilitates the timely deployment of the artillery which modern battle demands; 3. That, whereas the creation of corps artillery in certain corps may be necessary at times in defense, and occasionally desirable in a battle fought according to a preconceived plan, it may be a distinct disadvantage in...
